Dear Homer, dear Machteld:

The symposium went off admirably well, and Homer, you deserve the plaudits of all concerned for all the preparations; you both should be happy that all things considered the speeches jibed fairly well. I think Hetty would have been pleased, though she probably would have some remark along the line that even if she did not quite recognize herself, she still enjoyed it.

It does seem to me that Homer's Introduction and the four speeches are worth preserving and making available at least in xeroxed form; and I should advocate putting in front, Hetty's own charming Bryn Mawr address.

They would add up to a chapter in growth of classical archaeology in this country - and to the intellectual history of it, as well as to the story of research and discovery in the Aegean and the Near East. (Perhaps the only aspect that seemed slightly underplayed - she was with Wace and Blegen the real pioneer in defining the "Helladic" sequence of the mainland in the twenties).

(my)
I had so disfigured the original manuscript that it needs retyping. I should also like to add a note on the people with whom she studied here - if Radcliffe can produce the information. This may take a couple of weeks.

In the meantime, many thanks for an event both stimulating and enriching in both scholarly and human ways,

Sincerely yours,

George M.A. Hanfmann

PS. I have also taken the liberty to ask Bob Ehrich to put down what recollections he had of the Starcevo and other Prehistoric episodes so as to fill in the sequence - and to send it to Homer.

Saul Weinberg called from Augustine's office. Augustine would be happy to do job. He has made a preliminary estimate, which is on the high side, to be safe, of a ~~maximum~~ of $2,500. This would be for 600 copies, and would cover distribution to authors and for review, leaving some 550 for sale, at around $7.00 a copy. When he has final details from Weinberg this figure may be revised downward.

Dear Dr. Weinberg:

We were delighted that you had found in Augustine a publisher competent and willing to put out the Goldman Festschrift. The arrangements that you have discussed with him seem satisfactory to us, and the Institute will make available a subvention of up to $2,500 to make the publication possible.

I have seen the outline of contributions, and have heard from Ben Meritt about some of them. I think you are to be congratulated for the great success of your undertaking; we are in your debt for it.

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer:

Mr. Augustin has just written asking that I forward the enclosed invoice for a partial payment on the Goldman volume to you. All but the last few articles have already been corrected in page proof and have been returned to the printer. I understand that it was at this stage in the printing of the Herzfeld volume that a partial payment was made and Mr. Augustin asks that the same procedure be followed in this instance.

It is my hope that all the remaining proof will be in the hands of the printer by the 15th and that he will then be able to make the last corrections and go to press. I believe that all other matters have been cared for, the binding chosen, the preliminary pages approved, with the exception of one page about which Homer Thompson will have spoken with you. I have sent on to Augustin your request for a presentation copy of the volume bound in leather and sedately tooled. I suggested to Augustin that if he chanced to be in Princeton he might get a more detailed idea of just what you wanted for this copy from you. With all this done, I trust that the volume will be ready for December 19 and I await further word on the events of that day from you.

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer:

When forwarding Augustin's bill to you the other day, I had meant to ask if I, too, might have an advance in about the same proportion for the editorial expenses which I have already incurred. I have kept them down as much as possible, the airmail to Europe has been running the amount up during the reading of proofs. I passed the $100 mark some time ago and I wondered if I might have an advance of $100 now and then the remainder when the volume is out, manuscripts and illustrations returned to the authors, and all the other post-publication correspondence seems to be finished.

All but the last article should be in the hands of the printer today and if the last article doesn't appear this afternoon I shall cable the author, for we cannot be held up at this point.

Mr. Augustin said he would see you last week about the binding of the presentation copy, and I trust that has been agreed on.

Dear Robert:

According to a letter just received from Saul Weinberg, more than half the Goldman Festschrift is already in galley proof, and the whole thing is moving along at such a good rate that the publisher is confident of having the book ready before Miss Goldman's 75th birthday on December 19th. (Wednesday)

This raises in my mind the question of how the volume is to be presented, and I should very much like to know your views on the matter. Miss Goldman, I am sure, would be greatly pleased if something could be made of the occasion at the Institute, and I am also sure that some such gesture would be welcomed by the other members of the family, particularly by Mr. and Mrs. Ashton Sanborn. The Sanborns, as I recall, had done the honors on the occasion of Miss Goldman's 70th birthday.

There seems good reason to believe that Miss Goldman is still unaware of the existence of the Festschrift.

Many thanks for your recent letter about the affairs of Akerström and Mylonas. Akerström dropped in only yesterday and assured me that his complicated arrangements were working out well and that he is confident of reaching Princeton in time for the beginning of term. Your proposal regarding Mylonas' publication seems very reasonable to me; Mylonas is now working over his MS in the hope of being able to reduce the number of plates and so the cost.

Dorothy and our youngest daughter arrived on the 12th and we expect the other two girls on the 25th so that we shall have a family reunion here in Athens for the first time since 1939.

Please share my warm greetings with Kitty.

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer:

The very long delay in answering your letter of May 28 concerning the Goldman Festschrift has been caused by the volume itself. It has been very time consuming of late, but all the articles are at the printers, we have galley of half the volume already and most of that is already back from the authors and off to the printer. Thanks to Augustin's speed, we seem to be going well on schedule.

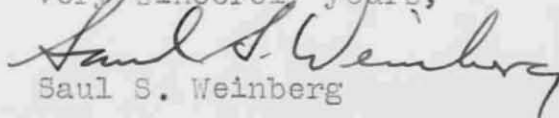

I had a letter from Homer Thompson suggesting a few changes in the Preface, including that which you had indicated, so it is now ready for press.

Miss Goldman's sister, Mrs. Ashton Sanborn, is sending us a recent photographic portrait of Miss Goldman which is said to be very fine and should serve admirably as the frontispiece.

I had meant before this to ask what arrangement is to be made for editorial expenses. I understand that in the case of the Herzfeld volume such expenses were paid to the editor by the Institute and I wondered if the same system is to be used this time or if I should make arrangements with Augustin with regard to them. I have kept them very low and up to the present they are certainly not more than about a hundred dollars and there should be only postage on proofs hereafter, unless I am forgetting something.

May I also include something of a personal nature in this letter. Mrs. Weinberg and I are hoping to be able to spend August in Princeton, living in the Homer Thompson's house. On previous such occasions, Homer has usually arranged to have us work at the Institute in his section. Since he is away, I should like to ask your permission for our use of the Institute facilities during August and perhaps the first week in September.

Very sincerely yours,

Saul S. Weinberg

28 May 1956

Dear Dr. Weinberg:

Thank you for your good letter, and for the copy of Homer's preface. I think the style and scope of the preface is admirable, and it is most appropriate that he be the one to write it. I have only one, very minor, correction: in the next but last line of the next but last paragraph Homer has us "look forward with complacence to.....". I am afraid that is a French use of the word; that we should say "pleasure" or "confidence" instead.

I am sorry that you have had the burden of the bibliography, but it is indeed true that Miss Sachs has her hands full. Of course, you should take advantage of anything that is helpful that we have prepared.

Again I should like to express on behalf of the Institute our pleasure and appreciation that you have undertaken the duties of editor of this Festschrift.

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer:

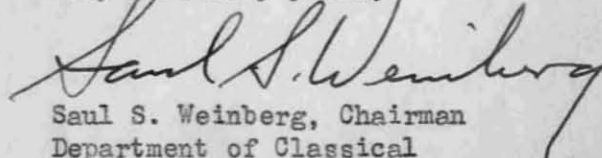

In connection with the work of editing the volume in honor of Hetty Goldman, I recently asked Professor Homer A. Thompson of the Institute if he would write an appreciation of Professor Goldman as an introduction to the volume. Since Professor Thompson had not been able to write an article for the volume, yet had spent much time in helping to organize it, I felt it would be most appropriate to have him do this.

I have just received from Professor Thompson such an appreciation written in the form of a Preface to the volume. In submitting it, Professor Thompson has asked that before it is used it be submitted to you, with the thought that you may wish to make changes, additions, or even write a separate appreciation either in addition to or instead of this one. Therefore, I have enclosed a copy of the Preface sent by Professor Thompson and would greatly appreciate your thoughts about it.

Part of the plan for the volume is to have a bibliography. Since Miss Judith Sachs had already compiled a partial one for the recent volume published by the Institute, I had hoped that she would complete this by carrying it back beyond the scope of the Institute bibliography. While Miss Sachs had told me she would not have time to do this, I had later indications that she might. But this has not materialized and so I will have to proceed with the preparation of the bibliography myself. However, I should like to ask your permission to use the material in the Institute bibliography, giving proper acknowledgment to Miss Sachs.

The volume progresses well, with more than half the material already being set up in Germany. Augustin assures me that there will be no trouble in getting it out on time and I am confident that it will be a well-printed and well-designed volume, as well as one full of most important material.

Very sincerely yours,)

PREFACE

The collection of essays here assembled is offered to Hetty Goldman as a tribute of affection and esteem on the occasion of her seventy-fifth birthday: December 19th, 1956.

The three quarters of a century during which Miss Goldman has been among us may well be regarded as the golden age of archaeology in Greek lands and the Near East. For over half that time she herself has been in the forefront of those who have advanced the boundaries of historical knowledge by archaeological exploration and study.

Miss Goldman's name is associated chiefly with four sites: Halae in northern Boeotia, Eutresis in southern Boeotia, Colophon in Asia Minor and Tarsus at the foot of the Taurus. The first three of these sites are small; none, archaeologically speaking, is glamorous; all of them were virtually unknown before Miss Goldman's coming. As a result of her well planned and persistent exploration each of the places has recovered its well defined personality. Halae is known to us again as a small seaside town of the classical period whose citizens looked for subsistence both to the land and the sea, maintained their fortifications and modest sanctuaries through the centuries, and buried their dead with a surprising wealth of fine vases and terracotta figurines. Eutresis now stands as a type site of central Greece that flourished throughout the Bronze Age and later, chiefly as the centre of a fertile agricultural district but with enough contacts with the outside world to color the development of its arts and crafts. The excavation of Colophon, although interrupted by the events of 1922, has given us our first tangible picture of one of the oldest and most famous of the cities of Ionia, known previously only from the tantalizingly vague references in the authors. Miss Goldman's work at Tarsus has afforded a vivid glimpse into a part of the city of St. Paul, albeit a district of potters and coroplasts; more significantly, perhaps, it has revealed some of the earlier history of this age-old strategic site and of its relations both with the Anatolian hinterland and with the Aegean world.

The publication of these various sites, whether in the form of journal articles or of monographs, has been marked by great lucidity of exposition, a wholesome sense of proportion rarely found in excavators, a readiness to draw general conclusions when the evidence permitted, but equally by a scrupulous regard for the limitations of archaeological evidence.

Among the subjects that have always intrigued Miss Goldman's wide-ranging mind is the question of the relationship between the Greek world and the lands around the eastern Mediterranean in matters of racial affinity, commerce of goods and ideas, and religious beliefs. With such problems she has dealt repeatedly in presenting the results of her excavations as well as in independent studies. In recognition of her interest in this field, and in appreciation of the contributions that she has made toward its better understanding, the essays of the present volume are largely devoted to the relations between the Aegean and the Near East.

The twenty two contributors to the volume represent various larger groups: the scholars of all the world who have profited from Miss Goldman's writings, her many associates both in the pleasures of digging and the pains of publishing, and those institutions whose academic life has been enriched by her participation, viz. Bryn Mawr College, Harvard University, the Fogg Art Museum, the Archaeological Institute of America, the American Numismatic Society and the Institute for Advanced Study. All these acknowledge their present obligation to Miss Goldman and look forward with complacence to the extension of their indebtedness in the years still ahead.

The Institute for Advanced Study, under whose auspices this volume appears, gratefully acknowledges the editorial assistance of Professor Saul S. Weinberg and the good offices of J. J. Augustin as publisher.

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer:

It was a great pleasure to receive this morning your assurances that the subvention for the Goldman Festschrift would be available up to the maximum amount which Augustin thinks necessary. He has assured me that there will very likely be a decrease in this amount when he has all the material in hand and can make a clearer estimate of costs.

What is most encouraging is that he has presses free at the moment and is ready to run the material as fast as I can get it to him. I plan to spend the Easter holiday beginning now on this work and I hope that at least the majority if not all of the material can be got to him in the next two weeks. He assures me that if this is so he will have no trouble in making the deadline which is December 19, the date of Miss Goldman's 75th birthday.

With such encouragement and assurances from both you and the publisher, I feel that there will be no difficulty in producing the volume and I am confident that the material in it will make it a worthy gift for the occasion. I want to thank you again for the part you have played in making this undertaking a success.

Goldman Festschrift

Professor Meritt came in to ask what the Institute's commitment was in regard to this. As I understand, he had first heard of it when he was asked to write a piece for it by Weinberg. Weinberg then approached the American School Publications Committee (which includes Meritt and Cherniss) whether they would publish it as a supplement to Hesperia. Meritt then looked at some old corres. from Thompson and saw a reference to the Institute supporting the publication. I showed Prof. Meritt the memo. from Thompson, which is all the paper we had.

I then consulted Professor Cherniss, who knew of the project through the Weinberg approach to the American School Pubs. Comm. W. did not then mention Institute support. (The matter was not brought up at a HS School mtg.) Cherniss said it ~~was~~ was in effect certain that the Publications Committee would turn down the suggestion at their meeting on April 15th, due mainly to lack of funds.

Tuesday a.m.

Yesterday Saul Weinberg came in. He is in Princeton until noon today, and will be in New York until ~~Monday~~ p.m. He said that Thompson had written to him on November 30, 1954:

"... As to financing, Dr. Oppenheimer assures me of a substantial sum, possibly enough to cover the cost."

He has proceeded with the project, and gave me the attached list of contents. He approached the Princeton University Press, and was told that they had made a rule not to handle Festschriften, no matter what the financial backing. He is still hopeful about Hesperia, on the grounds that such a publication fits better in a series. ~~His mother~~ The Archaeological Institute of America has turned it down. He said his next step was to talk with J. J. Augustine in New York, who did the Herzfeld Festschrift. I suggested that he do this and then write you in detail. I asked if he had any idea about cost, and he said that the Herzfeld book had cost $3,000, and with the rise in costs he was sure this would not be under $4,000.

I did not try for an appt. for Weinberg with you this morning, for one thing because your and his timing was so tight, and for another because it seemed to me more useful for him to communicate with you after he had seen Augustine.

Weinberg will telephone us from NY either Monday p.m. or Tuesday a.m.

Dr. Robert Oppenheimer
The Institute for Advanced Study

Dear Robert:

Last summer in Athens Saul Weinberg, the writer of the attached letter, broached the subject of a Festschrift for Hetty Goldman. Since it was he who had taken the initiative, but since the Institute would inevitably be much interested, I asked him after further thought to put down his ideas on paper, - hence the letter.

Miss Goldman, I am sure, would be deeply gratified by such a gesture and the central theme which Weinberg has suggested would be thoroughly appropriate to her dual interests.

Saul Weinberg is primarily a classical archaeologist who has also concerned himself with eastern connections. He is Professor of Classical Archaeology in the University of Missouri but is spending this year in Athens as Annual Professor at the American School of Classical Studies. He has known Miss Goldman for many years and the two are thoroughly congenial. Being a vigorous and efficient person he would, I am confident, be a capable editor.

I would appreciate your reaction to this proposition. It should, I suppose, be laid before the faculty either of the School or of the whole Institute fairly soon for discussion of the principle and of the participation or support of the Institute. The Herzfeld volume would seem to furnish a useful precedent but I was not here when the arrangements for it were concluded.

Yours,

Homer
